What Some People have Believed.

The ancient Pers.ans, believed in three gods, the greatest of which was Ormuzzi, who made a perfect man with a giant head. An infinite distress caused his monstrous head to burst with terrible anguish, when out stepped a beautiful woman, the head shrank to a natural size, and they became the first man and wife. The Greeks also believed the beautiful Minerva sprang from the head of Juniter.

The ancient Hindoos believed a moustrous serpent cotled upon the ocean. On him Viehu slept for long ages in inactivity and died. Out of his departing life Bramah arose, who created man by the simple act

The ancient Syrians believed somewhere in their country was a beautiful garden, into which God came one night and gathered particles of all kinds of dust, with which to make a man. He fushioned him after his own image. When sufficiently dry to be handled without defacing, he placed him self mouth to mouth, hands to hands, and feet to feet, and imparted life to the image. Sleep had possession of the man. The good drew a glittering blade from his girdle, and, with infinite quickness, took a bone (of the two hundred and forty-eight bones) from near the heart, and placing the requisite female depandencies around it, gave it to the man to become his wife.

The Aztecs believed that a princess, be ing oftended at her husband, obtained leave Deity to depart frem Paradise on condition that she would go to earth and populate it. She started on her long and perilous journey. When once in sight of carth, she drew from her girdle a knife glittering with diamonds and hurled it against the planet, breaking it into twelve pieces, which immediately resolved themselves into six knights and six princesses, from which sprang six races of men.

The ancient Egyptians believed two gods descended from the sun and alighted on the flowery banks of a beautiful lake on a pleasant morning, and planted the germ of loiws plant, each kissing it on sides. The plant grew and ripened its fruits. The legumes burst, and a beautiful man ad woman like the rine corn from the husks, seepped forth in spontaneous mar-

He again burst his shell, the fragments of which became earth, mountains and rocks. The giant came from the mountains and elept beside a placid lake. I'rom his head sprang a noble race of thinkers. From his ong arms, stretched by his side, a race of workers. From his legs, a race of travelers, and from his fingers and toes, the lowest race all.

FEMALE EDUCATION .- All admit that a propeducation of women will elevate society. But as to what this proper education is, there is a diversity of opinion. Some say she should be taught the accomplishments and refinements of life, with a proper reverence for, and a due sense of, her dependence on man; thus is she fitted to fill her destined sphere. Others say that mentalshe is the equal of man. and it is time to assert her rights: claim the privilege of voting, be entitled to a seat in legislative assemblies, and to share in the administration of government, and consequently her education should be such as enable her to perform these duties well. owever, it is not our intention to discuss the opinions of others, but to express our own their ephere in life, there is much to be atended to besides the mere storing of the mind with knowledge, or the polishing he manners by accomplishments. In iov, even at the risk of being termed 'romp: ch exercise as will give strength to the body. A healthy organization of the physicalisnecessary for the perfect development of the mental facultics. In disciplining the mind, we would inculcate the necessity of uniring energy and patient perseverance.

We should give her a thorough knowledge of the branches of linglish ed-Enable her to reason concisely and correctly, and those whose position and corcumstances give them means and leisure, should devote their time to the acquisition of the higher branches of literure, and the attainment of the elegant arts, instead of wasting, or worse than wasting, their time in reading works of fiction of doubtful morality This kind of reading enervates the mind, vitiates the taste and gives a false impression of life, which renders the performance of its real duties distasteful.

Were we to propose a course of reading. we would recommend history and biography, particularly the biography of females who are models of moral and mental ex-cellence. She would also have an acjustance with the politics and the adminstration of the government of our own country. Not that she should be qualified to vote, become a public speaker, or take a part in the councils of the nation, but that she may be able to make an impress upon her sons, which will enable them to fill those places with honor. We deprecate anything like women becoming public lecturers or politicians, but we think the possession of such knowledge elevates the character, and lessens that fondness for trifling conversation and gossip which is attributed to the sex, and which is unfortunately too true. While we would educate women in those branches of knowledge which were former. ly considered as belonging exclusively to en, we would impress her with the conviction that the possession of this knowledge was to render her more competent to eriorm properly the duties belonging to er own sphere.

We have lately heard of "Women's Rights," and the woman's attaining her true poeition in society. We think there as no right equal to that of impressing upon the unformed and immortal mind of her children centiments and opinions that py2 d6 will make them useful and esteemed mem-bers of society, and fit them for eternal
